ESPO

VanEck Video Gaming and eSports ETF

The video game industry is disrupting traditional media and entertainment by leveraging new technologies and business models to address consumer demand for online, interactive entertainment.

Consistent Revenue Growth

Video game companies have grown their revenues consistently over the last decade by diversifying across platforms and embracing new technology. Mobile gaming, a platform which did not exist 15 years ago, now represents the largest percentage of global games revenues, larger than both PC and console.

A New Business Model - Game as Service

Publishers are also embracing a new business model – game as service – to deliver free games which generate revenues through smaller, in-game transactions. The game as service model serves dual purposes, by both increasing the revenue potential of a single consumer and also extending the life-cycle of the game itself.

Publishers Reap the Esports Rewards

Publishers not only own the rights to the games being played in esports competitions, but they are now launching and running esports leagues around their own games. Publishers are then able to control the majority of esports revenues, including media rights and sponsorships, among others.

Invest in the Future of Sports

Competitive video gaming audience expected to reach 640.8 million people by 2025¹

Esports revenue growth has averaged almost 28% yearly since 2015, supported by a young, affluent audience²

Companies must derive at least 50% of total revenues from video gaming and/or esports to be initially eligible for the Index

The "Net Asset Value" (NAV) of a Fund is determined at the close of each business day, and represents the dollar value of one share of the fund. It is calculated by taking the total assets of the fund, subtracting total liabilities, and dividing by the total number of shares outstanding. The NAV is not necessarily the same as the ETF's intraday trading value. Investors should not expect to buy or sell shares at NAV.
